Kitticism is still an ongoing topic. The London Pall Mall Gazette thinks it has found the solution of the Kitticism controversy. "It is a question of power, and the question is Who is to be the master in the Church of England—the clergy or the laity congregations?" It has little doubt what the answer will be when the issue is once made thoroughly clear to the common understanding. The his elected friends assume authority to forgive sins, extend forgiveness, such exorcism, and control the shared property. "he will feel called upon to make them know that he is not a hypocrite."

There would have been less trouble through the break of men of technical training and scholarship of thought, but devoid of popular sympathy. The London Free Church thinks that the number of English Free Church members is estimated to be 1,200,000. It is now a converted allegiance in London, and the Free Church of Scotland, a power (stander) power, says: "The desire would be to introduce the people through the Church of England, and then move with the fathers of our Church and their institutions, to unite with discipline and with the laws of the Church and the discipline of the Church of Scotland. If the present policy of the English Church is to be generally accepted by Anglicans, it will not take us long to see such tremendous changes as have been and are being made."

The Royal Commission on Ritualism continues to give general dissatisfaction as to its constituent elements, although the High Church

POETRY.

ON MY SUNDAY SCHOOL OF MORNING.
BY PAUL.

Oh! how sweet and true
The sunbeams of the morn'g
To the school-boys' eyes
As they come to school
To learn the way to heaven
And to the world's best friend
The Lord who made us all
And who will save us all
From all our sins and woes
And who will give us all
The life that never ends
In the life to come.
